Short Biography: Roland Mack

Roland Mack was born on October 12, 1949 in Freiburg. He grew up in Waldkirch, where he attended elementary school and graduated from high school.

From 1969 until 1974 he studied at the "Technische Universität Karlsruhe" (university for engineering). He completed his degree as a graduate engineer. Before and during his course of studies Roland Mack completed several practical trainings in engineering companies, among them the family's own manufacture company, the Heinrich Mack GmbH & Co, based in Waldkirch. During an internship in the USA, which lasted several months, he also gained professional experience abroad.

After completing his degree as a graduate engineer, Roland Mack attended postgraduate studies as a welding engineer at the "Lehr- und Versuchsanstalt" in Stuttgart. Afterwards, he took up the job as a chief welding engineer in the own manufacture company in Waldkirch.

Roland Mack is one of the founders of Europa-Park, which opened its doors on July 12, 1975. Since then, he is one of the managing directors (at first together with his father Franz Mack, today with his younger brother Jürgen Mack), who contributed - and still contributes - considerably to the development and expansion of the park.

In addition to his position as a managing director of the meanwhile biggest leisure park in Germany, Roland Mack also belonged to the original members of the VDFU (German Association of Amusement Industry) in 1978. There, he acted as a board member until 1983. From 1984 until 1992 he was vice president of the VDFU. In addition, he has been operating in the international association IAAPA for many years.

Since 1988 Roland Mack is a member of the Tourism Committee of the German Association of Chambers of Commerce and Industry.

In June 1990, Roland Mack has been appointed to the advisory board "Südwest" of the "Dresdner Bank".
